

Chipped

Chipped

by John Carter

On her desk, she keeps an ancient blue tea cup to whisk the spiders to safety, outside.

When I kiss her,
I feel the spot on her front tooth,
chipped,
from when she fell.

Her gentle disposition
is the sum
of these tiny destructions.

This woman,
with her chipped tooth,
who keeps a cup
to save the spiders.